The William Stead

Darlington

Named after a former Northern Echo editor who became one of the most influential men of his age, William Stead submitted several articles to the paper which were so well received that, in 1871, he was offered the editor's chair, without ever having set foot inside a newspaper office. He was in charge for nine years. His new journalism paved the way for today's tabloid press. One of the most influential men of his age, Stead was one of those who lost their life on board the Titanic in 1912.
